

HOMESCHOOLING AND CHILDHOOD SOCIALIZATION ESSAY

Unlike many students, my first year of schooling was undertaken at home, rather than amongst my peers. My subsequent years of schooling were spent in a.

Its roots in history is an indication that these attitudes are continually passed down from generation to generation. And lets face it, who wouldnt love to stay in their pajamas and not have to get dressed to go to school every day. The three main controversies are the socialization of homeschooling children versus public schooling, the educational quality, and the cost difference. She said her daughter still sees her friends at high school football games McCollum. Kelly, Anita E. These all basically are over the fact that many believe that homeschooled children are very sheltered and protected from the world around them Parents choose to homeschool their children for many years for many different reasons. When there is no social aspect to school the child is given the opportunity to focus in on their studies. Romanowski and Pearson both agree that homeschooling caters to the needs of the student. Essay on Socialization Skills And Children Of Public Schools - Homeschooled children have the same, if not more, socialization skills than children that go to public schools. Go to a school dance or experience having a first in-school crush. Once seen as a fringe activity usually associated with the religious right, homeschooling now encompasses many mainstream families looking for educational alternatives in the face of such issues as violence, peer pressure, and poor academic. The Times. Department of Education there are an estimated 1. Ensuring that homeschooled children have adequate social interaction can be a lot of work for homeschooling parents, and not all do it well. Homeschooling provides, a custom learning environment, no worry of bullies, or school violence, religion differences, socialization outside a regular classroom environment can be achieved. McCollum, Carmen. Prejudices do not have to stem from an incident that occurred to the person who upholds the attitudes. It has been said that homeschooling is not as effective as public schooling and I believe that is incorrect. This research shows that homeschooling is effective and that you dont necessarily need a traditional public school education to excel in school. While the Cardus participants were randomly selected, it looked only at young adults who were raised in religious homes, and it would therefore be unwise to generalize its findings to homeschooling writ large. Being a single mother of two I am thinking that homeschooling may be a better option financially for me as well. I also worried that my son may miss out on the Neff 4 social interaction, but after reading this information on how other parents get the socialization in for their children I am convinced that it can be done. After this switch, it was the schools responsibility to educate. But if students are only taught what is required they can miss out on some necessities of life like, social skills and the ability to find subjects they love or question certain lessons that are put forth These homeschooled children crave a greater degree of social interaction, and for some their opportunities for social interaction are so limited that they develop social phobias or experience extreme social awkwardness.